Summary Document

1. Meeting the specifications:

- General HTML/CSS: Our project has 5 pages in total, one of them is Home Page named as index.html, and others are Who Are We?, Events, Support Us, and Contact pages. There is a navigation bar on each page to enable transitions between these pages. And also every page has header, content, and footer sections respectively. All HTML pages use the same CSS file for styling.
- Interactivity: In the project we use jQuery in five components for user interaction, which are Tabs, Dialog, Auto-Complete, Date-Picker, Social Media Exp Group. For Dialog, and Social Media Exp Group components we use jQuery-UI widget, and for others we use jQuery plugins. For alert windows we use pure JavaScript. And we have 4 forms for interactivity, which are Event Searcher, Registration Form, Donate Form, and Contact Form.
- Ajax: The Click to see annual financial reports button on the Who Are We? page is an example of internal ajax. We pull our data here from the text file. The Series page on the Events page takes us to our page that allows us to find series content externally. This page is an example of external ajax.
- Code Style: For the sake of simplicity we divided the overall webpage into 5 pages according to the content it contains, and use separate HTML files for each of them. In order not to complicate the project, we have gathered all the CSS rules in one CSS file named as styles.css, and the same thing also applies to the JavaScript file named as index.js. And also we use enough comments and proper naming for variables and functions to increase readability.

2. Needs of our stakeholders:

The purpose of our website was to make it easy for a charity to reach its supporters and people they wanted to support. We needed to organize a website that was both attractive enough to attract the attention of young people and easy to use even for middle-aged and old people who are not very interested in technology, and we fulfilled these requirements. The website has information about the charity and what they do, as well as a donation section, so we have consolidated our stakeholder's needs into a single website. Maybe in the future, new things can be added to meet these two needs more easily, for example, a portal that provides membership and member login can be added to ensure that regular donors do not enter their information on the form again and again.
